b. How We Use Web Beacons

A web beacon is programming code that can be used to display an image on a web page like a .gif. file, but it can also be used to transfer an individual's unique user identification (often in the form of a cookie) to a database and associate the individual with previously acquired information about an individual in a database. This allows us to track certain websites an individual visits online. Web beacons are used to determine services an individual may be interested in and to track online behavioral habits for marketing purposes. For example, we may place, with the consent of a third party website, a web beacon on a third party's website where doctors discuss the benefits of physical therapy. When an individual listed in our database visits the discussion board website, we are notified by means of the web beacon that you visited that site and we would then update your profile with the information that you may be interested in services that we offer and may thereafter present offers of those certain services products to you. In addition to using web beacons on webpages, we also uses web beacons in email messages sent to individuals listed in our database. Web beacons help us understand the effectiveness of our advertising campaigns, count visits, customer usage, and lets us know when our emails have been opened or acted upon.
